

NEXUS Global Solutions Institutional EUR

FACTSHEET - April 2025

Strategy Objective

The Nexus Global Solutions Portfolio is an actively managed, globally diversified, multi-asset class fund. The aim is growth over the medium term, with a dual focus on capital protection as well as capital appreciation. An understanding of macro economic conditions together with detailed research into individual securities is used to construct diversified, highly liquid portfolios, able to adapt to a unique range of market conditions.

Investment Process

The fund manager's approach to investment combines strong valuation disciplines within a long-term strategic framework, together with a willingness to adjust asset allocation and stock selection in response to short term market opportunities. The Fund is not constrained by one particular investment style such as growth or value, but instead the manager believes that the best returns are achieved by correctly positioning the portfolio to benefit at all stages of each economic cycle. The manager has the mandate to search out value in all asset classes and so is well placed to judge the relative merits of a wide range of investment opportunities.

Market Commentary

The month of April was dominated by President Donald Trump and his tariffs, nothing else really mattered. Bond and equity markets experienced significant volatility as Trump announced his "reciprocal tariffs" on April 2 (dubbed "Liberation Day" in his own words). This was followed by a dramatic shift on April 9th, when heightened turbulence in bond and equity markets prompted Trump to announce a ninety-day delay to their implementation.

The last weeks of March, moving into early April, witnessed a simultaneous decline in the value of the dollar, U.S. equities and U.S. bonds. This market turbulence is what prompted President Trump to pause the implementation of his tariffs.

Trump's retreat allowed markets to recover, leaving them virtually unchanged for the month. However, the situation was very different in China, where concerns over Trump's planned 145% tariff on Chinese exports to the U.S. weighed heavily on the market. European and UK equities continue to outperform other developed market peers, benefiting from the lack of mega-cap technology stocks and a surge in the value of defence stocks. This divergence highlights the relative attractiveness of European and UK equities, which has been reflected in fund flows as asset managers reallocate away from the U.S. in favour of Europe.

Fixed income markets rallied towards the end of the month, while gold and bitcoin thrived. In contrast, oil fell sharply, reflecting fears of a looming recession. Despite the market's turnaround in April, it has still been one of the worst first 100 days for any U.S. President – all self-inflicted. The key question facing markets is; will there be a recession? The scale of Trump's tariffs, even if they do not reach the levels of his delayed reciprocal tariffs, will still act as a significant tax hike for U.S. consumers and businesses, adding pressure to the economy.

Business and consumer confidence have declined significantly, and unless Trump dramatically changes course, a U.S. economic slowdown – or even a recession – seems increasingly probable. Trump's chaotic policy making is leaving investors overwhelmed and uncertain.

We expect the U.S. dollar will continue to decline as foreign holders of U.S. assets continue to reduce their exposures. Trump's actions have rapidly made the U.S. an unattractive ally and trade partner. Our strategy remains focused on holding fewer U.S. dollar assets and preparing for slower growth in the U.S. and globally. Central banks will respond once growth slows significantly, but a turbulent period may precede their response.
